LET'S TALK ABOUT WOOD

Wood, as a building material, offers numerous appealing advantages. It has the ability to "breathe," ensuring a balanced oxygen level and optimal humidity within the house. Wood is renowned for its exceptional ability to keep homes cool in Summer and warm in Winter, creating a comfortable environment. Additionally, wood is a healthy choice for you and your family, as it does not cause allergic reactions or harm the body. In fact, wood emits phytoncides that naturally disinfect the air.

Throughout history, Oak wood has been widely used in construction due to the belief that it compensates for the deficiency of thermal energy required by the human body. In the past, oak was commonly utilized for the walls and floors of wooden houses, providing excellent protection against negative external influences and allowing for quick replenishment of one's energy. Oak effortlessly transfers its power through physical contact, bringing balance to the body.

The power of oak enhances overall activity, eliminates stagnation, positively affects the liver and cardiovascular system, and promotes the activity of reproductive cells in both men and women, leading to the birth of healthy and robust children. It is no wonder that the saying "As strong as an Oak!" became popular.

HARDNESS JANKA

Coswick flooring is manufactured from 7 different domestic and tropical wood species. Oak and ash flooring are classic choices that will fit most contemporary interiors. Flooring from American Walnut, Jatoba and Santos Mahogany is distinguished by exotic color tones and make flooring the focal point of any space.

In woodworking and hardwood flooring manufacturing, different wood species are compared to one another using the Janka method. Janka is a test which measures (in pounds) the force required to drive a metal ball (11.28 mm in diameter) into the wood to the depth of ½ the ball's diameter. The hardness of a given wood species is directly proportional to its Janka value: the higher the value, the higher the wood hardness.

Janka hardness test is calculated as an average between plain sawn and quarter sawn cuts and is meant to inform about structural properties of a given wood species, its resistance and durability.

The table on the right shows how wood species used to manufacture Coswick flooring compare against one another according to Janka scale. More detailed information about each of the wood species is found under the corresponding tabs above.

* Figures in the table are taken from Forests Products Laboratory (FPL, Madison, USA).

Each tree is believed to possess its own healing properties.

Birch wood relieves feelings of fatigue and tension.

Walnut wood has its healing properties.

Lime wood has a gentle invigorating effect.

Pine wood promotes metabolism and purifies the air we breathe.

Ash wood is believed to protect against negative energy and black magic forces

In children's rooms, wood not only promotes stability and a positive mood but also contributes to their cognitive development. Wood is a symbol of robust health and longevity.

HARDWOOD FLOORING INSTALLATION

One of the most crucial stages in hardwood floor installation is the preparation of both the floors and the material itself. Although this process may appear invisible to the customer, it can take more than a day to complete.

During this stage, our specialists meticulously assess the level and readiness of the room for installation, considering factors such as humidity ($65\% \pm 5\%$), temperature ($24^{\circ}\text{C} - 20^{\circ}\text{C}$), and ensuring that the floor level does not exceed a deflection of 2mm over a 2-meter span. Our experts thoroughly analyze all external factors within the room and its surrounding environment.

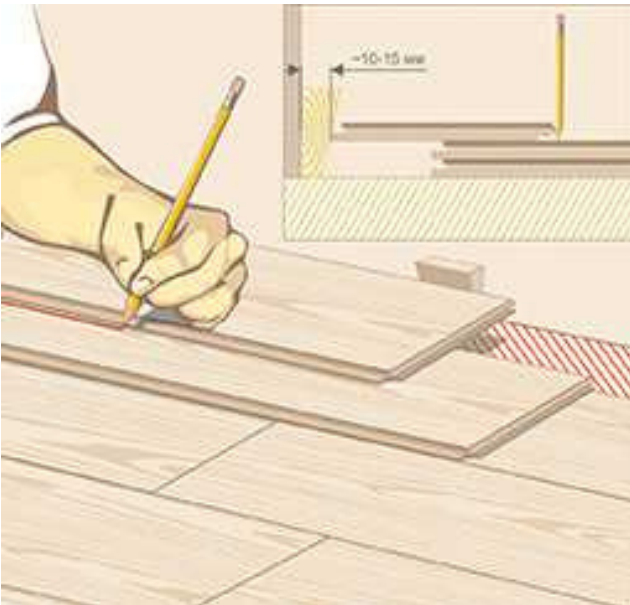

Our company excels not only in the art of hardwood floor installation but also provides customers with guidance and requirements for the proper maintenance of their flooring. Our aim is to enhance its durability and lifespan while preserving its original appearance for years to come.
